JEWETT CITY LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

and the faintest idea of penning another let-ter to The Bulletia this soon, and please don't consider that the "old man" is growing "dippy" in his de-crepitude."

erep!tude?

But to the point: Did you, Mr. Ellitor, ever stand upon the deck of some ocean steamer far out at sea and try to express the emotions which surged within, like the waves without? Well, whether or no, a petition, numerously signed, was presented to me this morning by two ladies who were circu lating the same, for my signature, with the special request that I write to the editor of The Bulletin, thus calling the attention of the borough officials and taxpayers, soliciting their aid in doing away with the dust nuisance with a street sprinklar.

Now what could I do, Mr. Editor, but reach down into the conservatory of my soul and try to express the emo-tions which surged within? And even then not get very far in the express business.

Jewett City streets all the spring, have been like some say life is—one darned thing after another. With horse team moving and the automobility from New London and Norwich specding north makes one feel as though attacked with laryngitis.

NEW HAVEN'S ELMS. Pity That They Cannot Be Saved-Has Yale Science Failed?

If New Haven, as reported, has given up hope of saving its famous eims, the probability that any of these trees in this part of the country will long survive their enemies seems dark. And if we lose our elms it will be a serious calamity, according to a Topic in The New York Tribune. Probably there is not in all the world a more beautiful tree than the elm. Certainly none surpasses it in com-bining grace and grandeur, and as a tree to plant near houses and along roads and streets it is unsurpassed. And until recently the elms that have been the one glory of se many of our small towns were well able to take care of themselves. Then, one after the other, came burs, and bugs, and more bugs, all miserable foreigners and assisted immisrants, and what is apparently turning out to be a losing battle with them began. Probably it did not begin quickly enough to be successful.

New Haven must know all the devices for carrying on the fight, and augreciation of the eims cannot be lacking there, but the New Haven elms are coming down and red oaks are rising in their places. The red oak is a fine tree, too, but it is a poor substitute for the eim as decoration for a city or landscape. Is it science that has failed or only Vale science?
